Songtrix Gold

A group of macros allows you to work with the keyboard. Main functions are:

- Sine Wave: frequency (keys); amplitude; octave; cosine.
- Waveform: frequency; amplitude; octave; waveform types (sawtooth, triangle, square, pulse); colors.
- Sequence: a sequence is a looped set of notes, that starts from a base note and ends to the same base note. The last played note defines the stop.
- Scale: a scale is the notes of a given instrument. When a scale is played, the keyboard is taken to any chord of that scale.
- Pitch: a pitch is a single note from a scale.
- KeySaw: a key-saw is a curve that maps the keyboard to a scale that starts at a given pitch and ends to a given pitch.
- ScaleSaw: a scale-saw is a curve that maps the keyboard to a given scale that starts and ends at a given pitch.
- KeyCentre: a key-centre is a key-saw with a given centre. The centre is the base note from which the keyboard is generated.
- KeyCentreSaw: a key-centre-saw is a key-saw with a given centre and a given width. The width determines how many semitones the key-saw is mapped to.
- Piano-Saw: a piano-saw is a key-saw with a given centre and a given width that starts on C and ends on C. The width is in semitones.
- Contour: a contour is a curve that maps pitches to pitches. The curve is optionally monotonic (a monotonic contour does not change the key) or cyclic (a cyclic contour maps pitches in a circle).
- ContourName: a contour name is a name of a contour. The contour name is displayed when the contour is set.
- Orthogonal: an orthogonal contour maps the keyboard to a set of pitches.
- Layer: the Layer allows the user to create a keyboard. The keyboard is generated from a fixed set of notes of a fixed range and with a given octave. The Layer can be modelled as an array of keys in a given octave.
- UpUpDownDown: an UpUpDownDown allows the user to create a keyboard that generates a set of pitches from a set of notes ( 77a5ca646e

GALLERY: The Top 30 New Products of 2014 This year, the media, retail analysts and bloggers are being rather critical of Black Friday hype. Don't get me wrong. We love Black Friday! In fact, it's our favorite time of the year. It's exciting, and we love to get our hands on the hottest new products of the year! But there are so many deals being advertised that if you don't read the fine print, you could end up overspending and in debt because of a product that doesn't work as well as you've been led to believe. With that being said, we found the most exciting products of 2014 to be the ones that stood the test of time. We found products that were significantly better than their predecessors, and we found products that were so good, they probably wouldn't need an upgrade in the future. The products we're talking about are innovative, often cheaper than their similar models and most of them are going to last the next decade, if not longer. With that in mind, check out
