Q: If $f(x)$ is measurable for all $X \in \mathcal{A}$ and $f(x)$ is a function of X for each X , then f is a function of X . Suppose $f(x)$ is measurable for each $X \in \mathcal{A}$ and, for each $X \in \mathcal{A}$, $f(x)$ is a function of X . Show that f is also a function of X . I think I can prove the result by contradiction: Suppose f is not a function of X . Define X_0 to be the set of all $x \in \mathcal{A}$ that $f(x)$ is not a function of X . By the countable additivity of \mathcal{A} , we must have $X_0 \in \mathcal{A}$ and $X_0 \subsetneq X_0$ since X_0 is nonempty. A: Hint: Suppose f is not a function of X . Define a set $A \in \mathcal{A}$ and $x \in A$ as the set of all $x \in \mathcal{A}$ such that $f(x)$ is not a function of X . It is also not difficult to see that $A \subsetneq A$. Having heard from many people that driving on Utah's slick and winding highways can be a challenge, we decided to find a more appealing location. We found it in Moab, nestled in the Colorado River Valley, in the southwest corner of Utah. Moab, located in southwestern Utah, is the home of the famed Maze District, a beloved part of the state's geologic history. Due to the arid climate, Moab's population is among the smallest in the state (it's estimated to be around 4,000, down from a peak of 8,000 in the 1970s), but its scenery, outdoor adventures, and natural beauty make it one of the most enjoyable towns in Utah. We drove past Moab on the way to our next destination of Arches National Park, and we loved it. Arches National Park, in the southwestern corner of Utah and in the north-central portion of Canyonlands National Park, is a national park located in Utah, right next door to Moab. This is a natural wonder of the National Park system. The park is world-renowned for its iconic arch rock formations (which are especially easy to see if you visit during spring – when the leaves have just begun to unfurl), the sheer scale of its canyons, and the nearby area's petroglyphs and petroglyph clusters. Fortunately, we ended up finding time for both, as we spent the remaining day of our trip hiking Arches and Canyonlands National Parks. These national parks are small and fairly easy to get around. The towns in the area, though, are pleasant and worth visiting, especially if you are spending a few days in the area. We found
