You must have a bad firmware updated to the connected USB memory. Change the firmware and retry. It appears to be a software problem. When using a external printer or some kind of device that is not connected to the unit itself there is no need to press the reset or cancel button. The two buttons serve an internal need. Save the settings and exit the application, thus, no connection to the unit. The unit should perform a back up on the next boot. As an added security measure, a password is required. It can be changed after booting up. Let's assume you have an HP LaserJet 1020 connected via USB, in that case you must update the USB memory, unplug it, plug it back in and restart the computer. You must do this as the firmware upgrade allows you to operate it in the connected mode. There is a high chance that your computer has the automatic reboot activated on startup. Try to disable that. if the printer is connected to the computer via usb cable, press the down arrow key in the back of the printer, than go to setup and update the firmware. if you dont see the program on the back of the printer, go to the printer menu and press the down arrow key to open the setup menu. than navigate to setup and update the firmware. What happens, does it say
